

Message from the CPME President:

Dear colleagues and friends,

It is with great enthusiasm that I share with you the latest CPME meetings' outcomes. This edition presents the results of the CPME Board and General Assembly meeting of 5 April as well as two reports from the CPME conference on 'Better Working Conditions for Better Care' and the joint event with the Federation of Veterinarians of Europe (FVE): 'Ensuring Health & Sustainability in Europe: Doctors and Veterinarians emphasise "prevention is better than cure".'

The CPME Board adopted several policies in response to recent EU developments: on Value Added Tax (VAT), on mental health at the workplace and last but not least a response to the consultation on health workforce skills.

The CPME General Assembly voted on two new applications to join CPME. We are happy to welcome the Turkish Medical Association who joined CPME as Associate Member and the new CPME Associate Organisation, the European Union of Medicine in Assurance and Social Security (EUMASS). Further information on both organizations is available on the CPME website.

The CPME newsletter also includes latest updates concerning the CPME Manifesto for the upcoming European elections. We are preparing for the coming months until the European elections and European doctors express their core message for a health agenda in the coming mandates. The CPME Manifesto is open for endorsement and may be consulted here.

Yours sincerely,
Dr Katrín Fjeldsted

OUTCOMES OF THE CPME BOARD AND GENERAL ASSEMBLY - 5 APRIL 2014 -

On 5 April, the CPME Board adopted the following statements:

- CPME response to the public consultation on a 'European Area of Skills and Qualifications' (CPME 2014/021)
- CPME response to the public consultation on the review of existing VAT legislation on public bodies and tax exemptions in the public interest (CPME 2014/016)
- CPME Policy on Mental Health at the Workplace — from the perspective of a practising physician (CPME 2013/098)

On 5 April, the CPME General Assembly voted on two applications to join CPME:

- The Turkish Medical Association joined CPME as an Associate Member.
- The European Union of Medicine in Assurance and Social Security (EUMASS) joined CPME as an Associated Organisation.

CPME comments on the ‘European Area of Skills and Qualifications’

Professional mobility is a cornerstone of CPME policy. Ensuring that there are clear frameworks for the recognition of doctors' qualifications in other Member States is an essential prerequisite. In light of the increasing numbers of EU-level initiatives addressing skills and qualifications, the CPME Board at its meeting on 5 April 2014 adopted a response to the public consultation on the 'European Area of Skills and Qualifications' (CPME 2014/021 FINAL). This statement highlights the need to respect Member States' competences relating to the training and education of healthcare professionals and to ensure there is no ambiguity as regards the framework for cross-border mobility of qualifications. CPME is monitoring various projects in this area, including the European Skills/Competences, Qualifications and Occupations (ESCO) initiative.

CPME response to the review of existing VAT legislation on public bodies and tax exemptions in the public interest

At its meeting on 5 April 2014, the CPME Board adopted a response to the public consultation on the EU legislative framework on value added tax. The consultation is taking place in the context of a review of the existing system of exemptions for services in the public interest. The CPME response reaffirms that access to high quality healthcare is a patient right which must be safeguarded by the legal and economic framework. CPME therefore supports the maintenance of the exemption of healthcare services from the VAT regime. At the same time, CPME encourages a review of the VAT burden on practitioners and the healthcare system who are obliged to absorb VAT expenditure, which has implications for the overall health budget.

Mental Health at the Workplace - CPME on effective prevention and treatment

Following recent studies on the increasing prevalence of mental ill health, in particular depression, among the working age population, there is increasing awareness for the impact of the workplace environment on mental health. In response to this discussion, the CPME Board at its meeting on 5 April 2014 adopted the 'CPME Policy on Mental Health at the Workplace' (CPME 2014/098 FINAL). This builds on past policies CPME has adopted on occupational health and reaffirms European doctors' commitment to promoting good practice. The policy discusses the prevention of mental ill health, as well as its diagnosis, treatment and rehabilitation. By identifying workplace- and employment-related risk factors to mental health, the policy discusses approaches to mitigating risks and creating organisational structures to protect mental health. Similarly the potential benefits of work environments and employment are highlighted. The policy also calls for a better involvement of and coordination between doctors in the prevention and treatment of mental health problems, underlining in particular the important role of occupational physicians.

CPME discusses 'Better Working Conditions for Better Care', 4 April 2014

On 4 April 2014, CPME hosted a conference on 'Better Working Conditions for Better Care –Discussing responsible health system policy'. This event provided a platform for the discussion of national experiences of working conditions for doctors from a physicians' and patients' perspective, as well as a reflection of European initiatives addressing the situation. A keynote address by Dr Stéphane Vandam, Public Health Officer at WHO-Europe, set the scene for discussions by illustrating the migration flows between European countries and policy approaches proposed to re-balance migration. Accounts of doctors' training and employment situation in Estonia, Greece and Romania were complemented with patient experiences from Bulgaria. In a second session, representatives of European level policy-making and projects offered ideas on promoting cooperation between Member States to improve both working conditions and quality of care.

CPME was honoured to welcome Commissioner Tonio Borg for the closing of the event. Commissioner Borg illustrated the various policy initiatives the European Commission is currently engaged in, highlighting the need for cooperation with stakeholders to improve outcomes.

'One Health' conference: Doctors and veterinarians emphasise 'Prevention is better than cure'

Building on the Memorandum of Understanding signed in 2013, CPME was pleased to collaborate with the Federation of Veterinarians of Europe \(FVE\) on a joint conference entitled 'Ensuring Health & Sustainability in Europe: Doctors and Veterinarians emphasise "prevention is better than cure"'. With the support of the Greek Presidency of the Council of the European Union and the European Commission, both organisations discussed practice and policy approaches to promoting disease prevention, highlighting areas in which collaboration between the animal and human health sector provide added value, for example infectious diseases and antimicrobial resistance.

The conference discussions showed the benefits of creating structures for cooperation both at practitioner-level and at political level in order to improve healthcare and health outcomes. CPME looks forward to future joint activities to enhance cooperation on these important topics.

On 2 April 2014, CPME President, Dr Katrin Fjeldsted and CPME Secretary General, Ms Birgit Beger, had a bilateral discussion with Dr Gianni Pittella, Vice-President of the European Parliament. Dr Fjeldsted presented the CPME Manifesto, launched in view of the upcoming European elections on 22-25 May 2014. She presented the main action points of the document, emphasizing the necessity to ensure the best possible quality of health and access to healthcare for everyone. The Vice-President of the European Parliament shared the doctors' concerns about economic restraints for healthcare budgets. He is already working hard to fight this austerity policy and promised that, after the elections, he will prioritise further promotion of health and especially, prevention. The CPME President, Dr Katrin Fjeldsted, explained also the importance of professional autonomy, in particular the possibility for doctors to provide healthcare in the best interest of patients.

At the end of the fruitful meeting, Dr Gianni Pittella signed the CPME Manifesto. He declared that he will support the action points of the document within his political and institutional activities and expressed his willingness for further meetings to continue his commitment and support public health goals.

Express your support towards high quality healthcare: Sign the CPME Manifesto today!

In view of the upcoming European elections on 22-25 May 2014, the Standing Committee of European Doctors (CPME), representing the National Medical Associations of 33 countries in Europe, takes once more the opportunity to ask your support for the Manifesto (available here).

The CPME Manifesto, developed together with the CPME members, mainly emphasises the principle of 'health in all policies', a strategy that encourages cross-sectorial awareness for and action on determinants of health, prevention of disease and promotion of good health across society. Moreover, it refers to the right to quality of care and patient safety, access to health, healthcare budget considerations and professional autonomy of physicians.

You can sign the Manifesto accessing the new section, entirely dedicated to the Manifesto, on the CPME website (available here). It contains a presentation of the document and a short survey inviting people to explain how do they intend to support the CPME document.

The Standing Committee of European Doctors thanks you for your support to the Manifesto and for your commitment to the CPME work towards a safe and better Europe for all citizens.

Clinical trials regulation: worrying shift on informed consent

On 2 April 2014, the European Parliament voted in favour of the agreement with Council on the Clinical Trials Regulation (2012/0192(COD)).

Several steps forward have certainly been achieved, such as the inclusion of ethics committees and the recognition of their role in the approval process: a clinical trial shall start only after the responsible ethics committee approved the trial protocol. The new regulation also guarantees strong transparency rules. Among other things, all trials results, whether positive, negative or inconclusive, shall be made public.

Regrettably though, the concept of informed consent was substantially weakened. The regulation introduces special derogations to informed consent. The new provisions introducing a broad consent in Article 28 (2a) and "simplified means" for informed consent in Article 30, are contrary to all internationally agreed ethical standards, such as the WMA Declaration of Helsinki.

Basic principles of medical ethics, such as informed consent, should not be weakened. This is a question of guaranteeing patients their right to self-determination and autonomy. CPME will continue to monitor developments, notably in the context of negotiations on the Data Protection Regulation.

The CPME-WMA joint press release issued after the vote, is available here.

Data protection in the EU: still a long road ahead of us

On 12 March 2014, the European Parliament adopted two crucial texts related to data protection.

The report on the data protection regulation was adopted with a large majority. CPME raised concerns especially on the issue of informed consent in the field of medical research. As for the Clinical Trials Regulation, derogations to informed consent have been introduced. This constitutes a dangerous shift in the weakening of medical ethics applied for research (please see also article "Clinical trials regulation: worrying shift on informed consent").

Also, the approach taken on the right to be forgotten does not guarantee a sufficient level of flexibility for doctors to keep medical records for treatment purposes. The Regulation should avoid creating situations where doctors will be restrained from the capacity to store medical records, hence putting the patients at a risk. Furthermore, the regulation should not impose unsustainable burdens on doctors, especially when they exercise in small and medium sized medical practices. The proposal of the European Parliament with regard to the data protection officer and the data protection impact assessment will definitely not ensure that.

The report on the electronic mass surveillance of EU citizens was also adopted on 12 March 2014. It establishes a European habeas corpus for digital rights and sets as a high level principle the protection of professional secrecy.

The medical profession welcomes this step forward and calls the EU institutions to ensure professional secrecy is effectively protected from surveillance programmes.

An open letter co-signed by CPME, CED and PGEU on these matters is available here.

CPME to adopt guidelines on transparency of the relationships between physicians and commercial companies

At its last Board meeting, CPME members agreed to start a drafting process for guidelines on transparency of the relationships between physicians and commercial companies. These guidelines will be based on the various experiences and regulations applying at national levels, as well as on previous CPME policies. They will seek to establish common standards of value on how to ethically cooperate with healthcare commercial companies. In 2005, the European Federation of Pharmaceutical Industries and Associations (EFPIA) and CPME signed a Joint Declaration on the cooperation between the medical profession and the pharmaceutical industry (CPME 2005/069 FINAL) and in 2007 a Joint Declaration on cooperation between the physicians and the medical technology industry (CPME 2007/028 FINAL).

CPME policy on eID for physicians: Let's implement it!

On 23 November 2014, the CPME Board adopted a policy "Ensuring the secure use of telemedicine and e-health applications in an integrated Europe - Towards a Common Policy Agreement on Electronic ID Systems for Physicians".

CPME is now in the second phase process of implementing the policy. This requires that the policy is upheld at national levels, either by the National Medical Associations or by the authorities entitled to issue the electronic ID for physicians. By doing so, one ensures that national eIDs conform to a minimum level of security standard. In the long run, the aim is to guarantee a common ground for a secure use of telemedicine and e-health applications in Europe.

Medical doctors' mobility: The perspective of European medical students

"Free movement of workers is a fundamental principle of the Treaty enshrined in Article 45 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union and developed by EU secondary legislation and the Case law of the Court of Justice" – European Commission.

The issue of medical doctors' mobility has been an ongoing subject of discussion in the European Union, and in recent years, with more new Member states joining the EU it has been an increasingly popular topic, regaining headlines in the media as EU Parliamentary elections of 2014 are approaching.

Migration of doctors and healthcare specialists has an immense impact on humanity, as healthcare is one of the fundamental grounds defining society. Societies who suffer from the low quality of healthcare are inevitably unable to achieve prosperity because human health directly relates to social, financial and educational outcomes. Main reasons for migration are usually named as following: higher salaries, better working conditions and career opportunities. Nevertheless, the economic factor alone almost never forces doctors to migrate – it is a complex of various issues or the outcome of all three reasons mentioned above.

Healthy ageing: launch of pilot international survey

On 31 March the coalition on health literacy of functional decline and frailty led by Prof Dr Gelu Onose, Chair of CPME WG Healthy and Active Ageing, launched the first international pilot survey on the topic. This initiative is part of the European Innovation Partnership on Active and Healthy Ageing (EIPAHA). It started as an individual commitment to contribute to 'Prevention of frailty and functional performance (/capacity – see further) decline' related to ageing and under the auspices of the EIPAHA, it became a more advanced endeavor under the framework of the A3 Action Group on Prevention of frailty and functional performance \(/capacity\) decline. The initiative will result in an assessment of the views, needs, benefits and barriers regarding health literacy (HL) on functional performance (/capacity) decline and frailty, related to ageing. The findings and the recommendations will constitute a unique tool to inform policies and decision-making at various levels. The two questionnaires are aimed at doctors and 60+ older adult patients. The questionnaire for doctors aims to assess the awareness of doctors on functional performance (/capacity) decline and frailty related to ageing and their possibilities to prevent/ delay the onset of these issues and/or mitigate their consequences. The questionnaire for patients also aims to assess the awareness, opinion and attitude of the population aged over 60 regarding healthy and active ageing. The surveys build on the conceptual framework of the European Health Literacy Project \(HLS-EU\).

CPME Mission Statement

The Standing Committee of European Doctors (CPME) represents national medical associations across Europe. We are committed to contributing the medical profession's point of view to EU and European policy-making through pro-active cooperation on a wide range of health and healthcare related issues.

- We believe the best possible quality of health and access to healthcare should be a reality for everyone. To achieve this, CPME promotes the highest level of medical training and practice, the safe mobility of physicians and patients, lawful and supportive working conditions for physicians and the provision of evidence-based, ethical and equitable healthcare services. We offer support to those working towards these objectives whenever needed.*
- We see the patient-doctor relationship as fundamental in achieving these objectives and are committed to ensuring its trust and confidentiality are protected while the relationship evolves with healthcare systems. Patient safety and quality of care are central to our policies.*
- We strongly advocate a 'health in all policies' approach to encourage cross-sectoral awareness for and action on the determinants of health, to prevent disease and promote good health across society.*

CPME's policies are shaped through the expertise provided by our membership of national medical associations, representing physicians across all medical specialties all over Europe and creating a dialogue between the national and European dimensions of health and healthcare.
